What Men Are Wearing This Season

The lock front turn down collars onen a trifle wider at the front, to admit the embrace of the heavier ties.

Extremes in hat shapes are meeting with little favor from correct dressers. The very small derbies and the wide brim derbies find few buvers.

Styles in shirts show little change. The trend is toward greater popularity for pleated bosoms. Plain negligees are coming in a strong second.

Black remains the strongest color in hose, but it is far from the most as-sertive. Solid, high colors are the thing; loud patterns are completely out.

Solid gold and silver buckles are a fad on belts for the increasing number of men who wear them. The leather is stamped with all manner of intricate and pleasing designs and oriental patterns. . . .

Prominent creases in trousers, creases which defy the ironing process of bending knees and much sitting down in chairs, are offered by a Western tailor. Some men will ask to be shown.

One of the most striking long costs for motoring is of olive green, in solid color, single breasted, buttoning close at the thront with a medium height collar that just permits the linen to be

A new wrinkle in suspenders is an end, cut like leather, but of reinforced fabric. The makers claim the fabric will hold its shape and not stretch at the button holes, being superior to leather.

Two years ago one of the best judges of men's clothes in New York said of the browns then just coming out: 'It is not brown that will be fashionable, rather a tan or a tan suggestion.' The styles of the day still bear out the statement. Pronounced brown in suits has bad some yogue, but the preference of the best dressers is to the present for the more delicate tan suggestions. leather.

Knit jackets are looking up these autumn days. They make desirable office and house garments, and are unusually comfortable for golfing and for the long rambles through the woods which the inspiring season invites.

Manufacturers of cloth report that the trade is far from settled as to the extent of popularity to be accorded to the high colors. It is nearly time to place orders for next spring, but tailors and manufacturers hesitate, waiting for the October and November sales to point the verdict of the men of America.

Style in a man's clothes is to a marked degree a matter of quality. Quality, which carries with it fit and finish, costs money Cheap imitations deceive no one and only give the wearer a sham appearance. Which is to say: If you can not afford something really first class, do not try to be in the extreme style. Be conservative and modest.
